Most dogs are great at following simple commands, like “sit” and “roll over.” But some can be trained to do amazing things. That’s the case for a dog named ^(a)Bear from Brisbane, Australia, who was recently *honored after he helped to save about 100 koalas from Australia’s bush fires in 2019 and 2020.

Last month, he received an Animal Action Award for his efforts. The award came from the International Fund for Animal Welfare, which is an organization that helps animals around the world.

Bear is able to recognize the smell of koala fur. His special skill ^(b)came in handy during the Australian bush fires, when thousands of acres of land burned and many koalas needed to be saved. He helped rescue about 100 koalas. He did it by *sniffing them out and dropping to the ground at the base of the (ア) that koalas were in.

Bear is a six-year-old Australian *cattle dog. He’s described as “having *loads of energy and enthusiasm for play,” as well as an excellent sense of smell. These qualities helped him in his work saving koalas and other wildlife, according to a ^(c)news release from the International Fund for Animal Welfare.

“We think Bear really (イ) this award because he’s been such a good boy in helping us find and rescue a lot of koalas, especially during the bush fires,” said his trainer, Romane Cristescu. “He works throughout the year to help us in our job to make a better and safer place for koalas. We’ll give Bear extra pats and extra play for his award.”

Many of the koalas were badly injured in the bush fires. (ウ) Bear’s efforts, they were taken to a safe place and rehabilitated, before being released back into the wild.
